FAMOUS CAVALIERI IN CONCERT HERE

Fair Lina, of Almost Girlish Appearance, Appears with Muratore, French Tenor.

The much heralded operatic soprano, Miss Lina Cavalieri, assisted by Lucien Muratore, the French tenor, and Edouard Tournon, pianist, entertained a large and appreciative audience yesterday afternoon at the Columbia Theater.

Stylish a grand operatic recital, the programme consisted of scenes from well known operas, and groups of songs in costume. The opera numbers were the scene of Saint Sepulchre from Mame (Massei), and the last act from Carmen (Bizet), which were well received by the audience.

The duo work of these singers was best in the Carmen scene. In this scene the fair Lina showed a flash of real vocal color and her tones were clear and full. What she lacked in highly polished vocal display, Miss Cavalieri more than made up in her finished acting. Her charm of personality and sheer beauty of features added greatly to the effectiveness of her work. In her solo number, "Chanson Napolitaine," Miss Cavalieri showed her vivaciousness to advantage. The vocal demands of this number were not exacting, but her impersonation brought forth an encore.

Mons. Muratore's work was worthy of note. Of a tall, powerful physique, and rather severe expression in his face, this dramatic tenor of the Paris grand opera fully to the demands of his numbers. He possesses a tenor voice of pleasing quality, and in his full rich tones he throws his whole being, displaying dramatic powers of the highest order. In the "Chanson Provencale," Mons. Muratore was at his best. His prolonged plaintive high tones were finished. In his encore number his crescendo work was excellent.

In the Napolitaine duo the concerted work of the singers was most happy.

The accompanist for the singers contributed three numbers to the programme, the "Second Mazurka," by Saint-Saens, his own "Valse in E," and Chopin's "First Scherzo."
